Austin, TX – Collain Healthcare, the leading EHR, Virtual Care and Interoperability provider for the Long-Term and Post-Acute Care (LTPAC) industry, announced that it has been acquired by Harris Computer Systems (“Harris”) through its healthcare group. Prior to this transaction, Collain had acquired intellectual property from LG CNS and an Austin-based interoperability and data think tank focused on Managed Care and Integrated Delivery Networks. Collain will be run as an independent business unit within Harris’ Healthcare Group and Robert (Bobby) Choi, a founding executive at Collain has been named Executive Vice President to lead the continued growth of the business. Dr. Maryann Choi, also a founding executive, will serve as Chief Medical Officer to continue Collain’s commitment to innovation and leadership in the LTPAC industry.

“Healthcare continues to evolve and challenge our industry. Now is the time to re-think and challenge the intersection of technology with actual LTPAC operations to succeed in the shift to PDPM, value-based care and personalized medicine,” commented Bobby Choi. “We are pleased to become part of the Harris family of companies with its deep experience, understanding, success and broad customer-base across the entire healthcare continuum, including the acute care, ambulatory, surgical and payor markets.”

As a physician, operator and owner of senior housing myself, I know firsthand that our industry needs to make difficult decisions, and think outside-the-box to succeed—and Collain will be the ideal technology partner.” Collain Healthcare will continue to operate in the Austin, Texas area where it is rapidly adding to its team, including research and development, while aggressively pursuing additional growth and acquisitions.
